About the University of Delaware Press

The University of Delaware Press celebrated the thirtieth anniversary in 2005 of its affiliation with the Associated University Presses headed by Julien Yoseloff, Director. The Press is especially known for its publications in Renaissance Studies, Eighteenth-Century Studies, Colonial American Literature, Art History, and two occasional series: Studies in 17th-18th-Century Art and Culture; History and Culture of Delaware and the Eastern Shore.

Many of the books which the University of Delaware Press has published have garnered national and international recognition. Since 1985, twenty-two books have received Choice awards for academic excellence, three in the past year. Other recent honors include the Modern Language Association Aldo and Jeanne Scaglione Prize for French and Francophone Literary Studies for Jeffrey L. Peters' Mapping Discord: Allegorical Cartography in Early Modern French Writing; the International Byron Society Elma Dangerfield Prize for Peter Cochran's edition of Lord Byron's Life in Italy by Teresa Guiccioli; and the Bibliographical Society of America William L. Mitchell Prize for Bibliography or Documentary Work in Early English Periodicals or Newspapers to William E. Rivers for his new edition of Thomas Amhurst's Terrae-Filius or, The Secret History of the University of Oxford (1721-1726).

The University of Delaware Press Editorial Board is comprised of scholars with expertise in a wide range of disciplines. The Press Editorial Board considers each manuscript on its merit and publishes the work of both new and seasoned scholars.

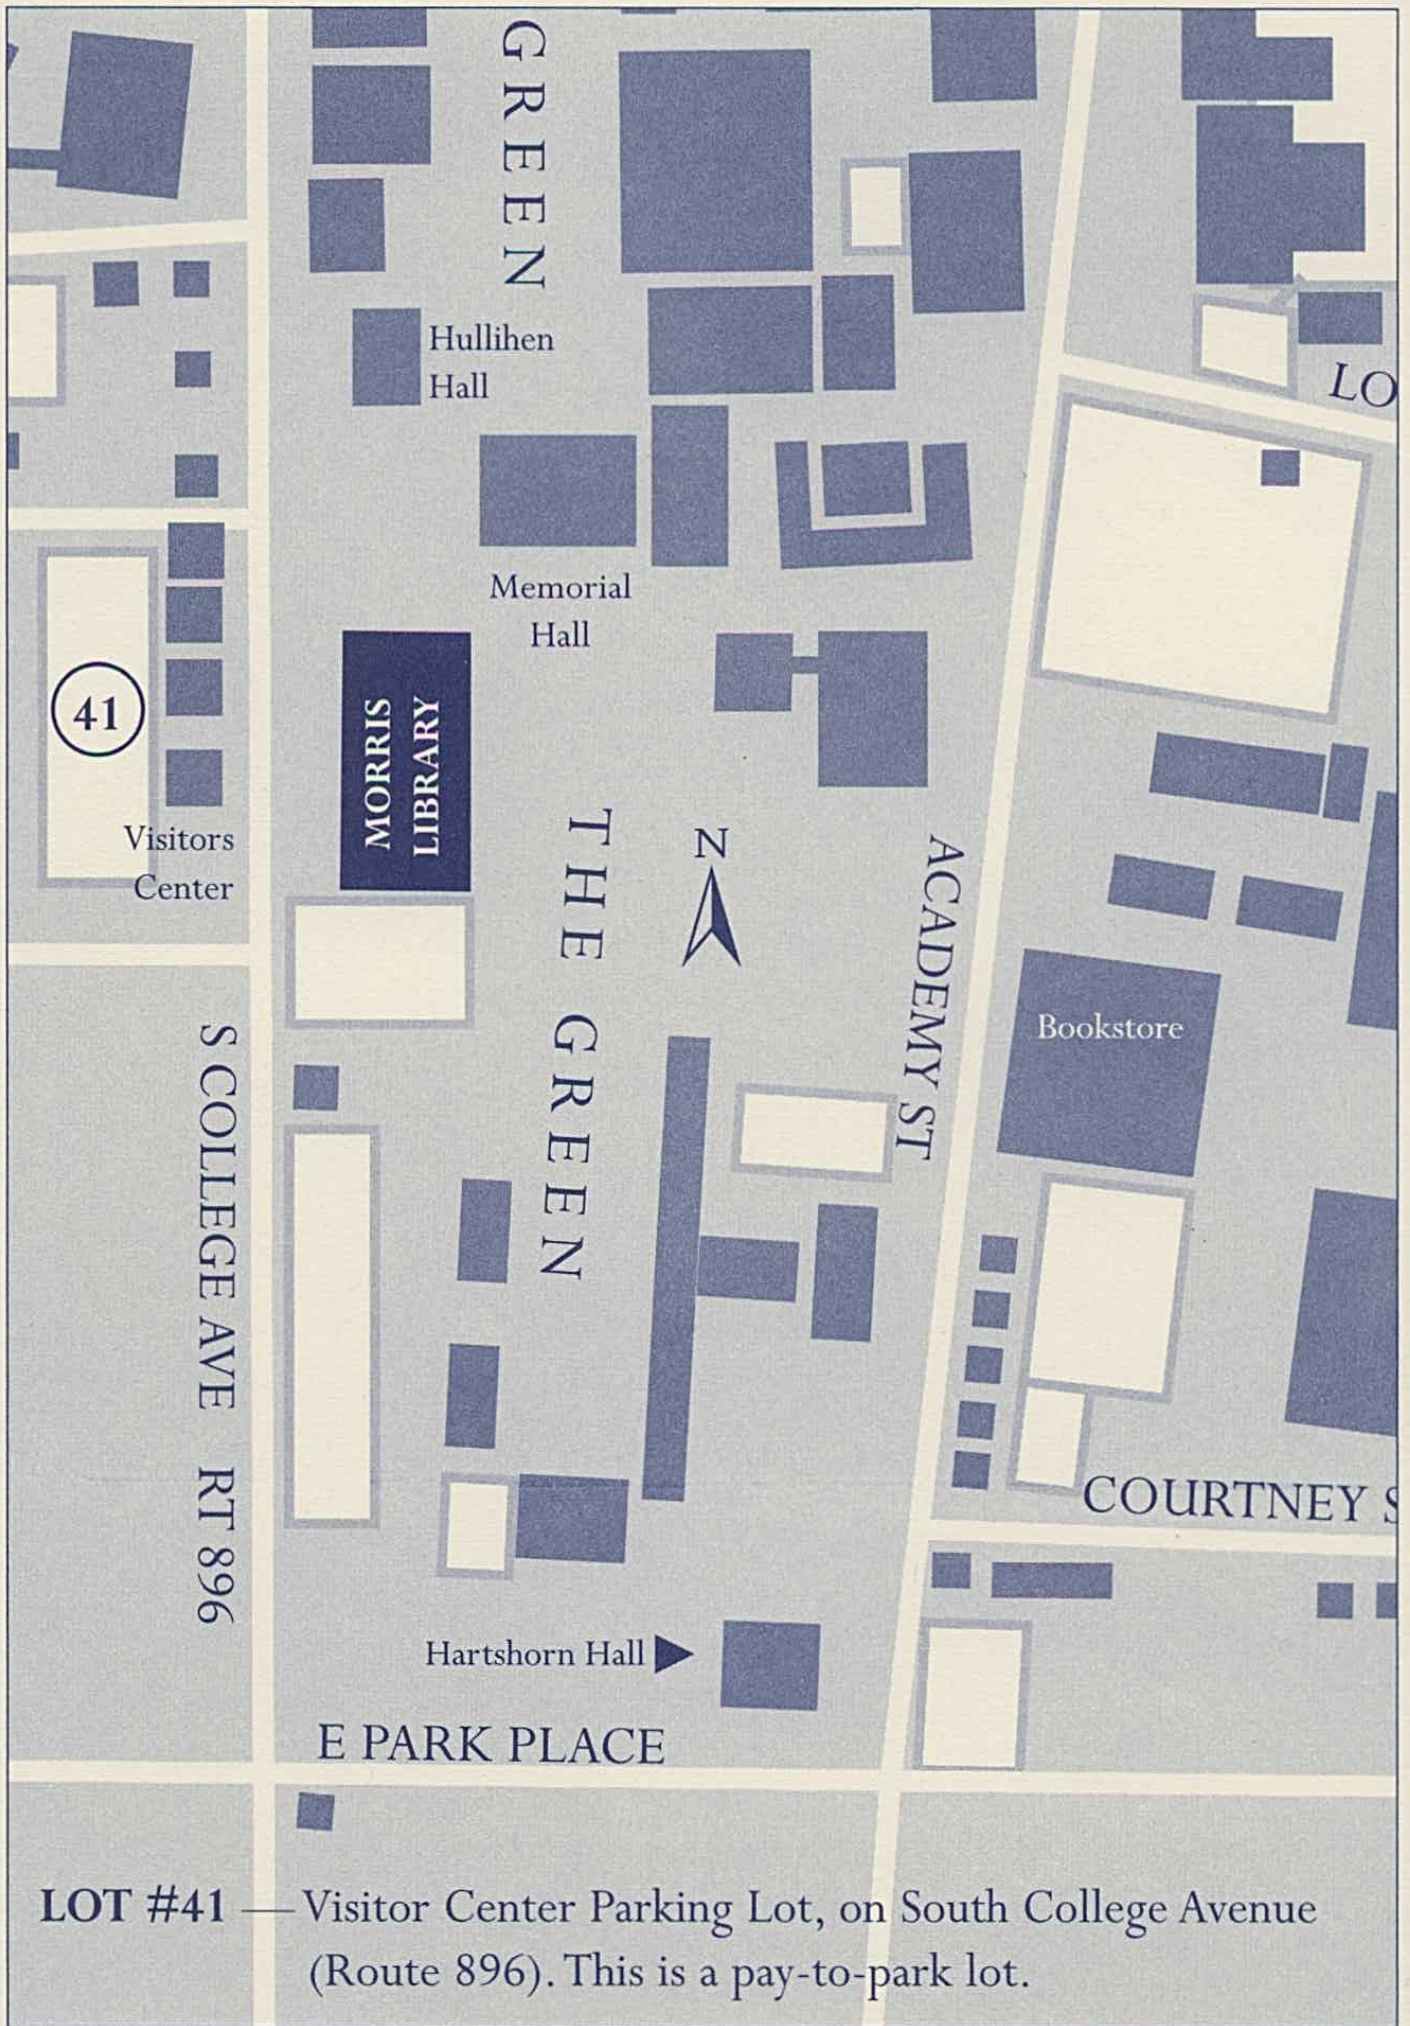

The Associated University Presses, based in Cranbury, New Jersey, was founded in 1966 by Thomas Yoseloff, who had extensive experience in scholarly publishing and son, Julien Yoseloff. Julien Yoseloff became Director of Associated University Presses in 1996.
