

Wilson Legg interviewing Joe Bryant clip 1
Topic: Working at the University of Delaware

[Joe Bryant answering a question about how he came to pursue criminal justice as his major at the University of Delaware.]

Joe Bryant: I had to work. I had to do work study I believe it was called. And my first job was as a security guard at the University of Delaware. So that was a, it was probably the first time that I, that it even came to my mind, but it was a job that was offered to me and I took it. And then from there, again, Scott [Cowans?] had a relationship with the chief of Newark Police Department Bill Brierley, who between the two of them came up with this idea of creating an internship for African American students both from University Delaware and Del Tech. And we, I along with the two others from UD, took on that internship where we were in uniform working at the police station with the police officers.
